It's not Sexually Suggestive; It's Educative
Separating Sex Education from Suggestive Content on TikTok videos

Enfa George , Mihai Surdeanu
The University of Arizona

Short summary

- SexTok, a multi-modal dataset
  - 1000 TikTok videos as video URLs
  - Labels : sexually suggestive (from the annotator point of view), sex-educational content, neither.
  - Perceived gender expression
  - Audio transcription via Whisper model
- To validate its importance, we explored two transformer-based models.
- Results suggest that the task of distinguishing between these types of videos is learnable but challenging.

Repo : https://github.com/enfageorge/SexTok
We invite further work on this task.

Transcription

Wanna see a magic trick? Abracadabra

Frames from the video

Suggestive Content

Explanation :

The coach in the video climaxes on the cheerleader's face.

Transcription

Guys, we need to have a discussion about banana size and baking banana bread... Average banana in the United States is about 5.5 inches long...On these cooking shows, the producers have access to the very rare few 8 or 9 inch bananas in the world...

Sex Education

Explanation :

The video used the euphemism of banana, baking banana bread, and cooking shows to dispel myths around penis sizes

Frame from the video